

Data is marketer's FIRST LOVE

One solid reason why data will always rock is because data helps marketers to understand customer's behaviour, trends and buying patterns. Employees might be the vital asset for a company. But for a marketer data is and perhaps and will be always the first love.

Friend, philosopher and guide

It is through data that a marketer finds way through the maze and intricacies of customer behaviour. Data throws light on what customer's aspirations are and what corresponding product/services are available in the market. Data helps a marketer to crack the customer insight code. This is the foundation for all the intelligent marketing operations.

Food for marketing

Data is the fuel on which marketing campaign are run. A data driven smart marketing operations connects instantly with the customer and get results. It resonates value and relevancy to a customer. This is how successful marketing operations are crafted.

A little data is a dangerous thing

Data can be the key decider in the success or failure of marketing operations. Organizations are increasingly resorting to marketing solutions which is crucial to insight based relationship marketing, supporting the management of contacts, profiles and behavior through transaction data. A little data is of no help since it does not have much input needed to arrive at business insights.

Turning over a new leaf

Marketers play with data that is a critical factor in powering their craft. New technologies are usurping the old ones for uncovering insights through the use of friendlier interface. The basic idea is to allow for a single customer viewing system, campaign execution, marketing automation and quality data management. This also results in better response management.

New thoughts. New expectations

There has been a tremendous paradigm shift in the thought process of an organization - the way they are looking up to marketers to drive strategic business initiative. In an effort to enrich customer experience, organizations are flirting with the potential role that marketing can play.

New environment requires new strategies

The days of heavy advertisement to attract customers are losing ground. Today the need of the hour is to launch more specifically targeted marketing campaigns - which is data driven and selected from diverse platforms, channels and sources.
